SKILLS AND UNIVERSITY
TEACHING/LEARNING:
NEW CONDITIONS FOR NEW IMPLICATIONS

National Study Day President: Dr. Assia BENETTAYEB

Head of the FLPATP Laboratory: Dr. Fatima Zohra ADDER

Thursday, June 13th, 2024

at the 30 Laboratories Building

Scope and Objectives of the Study Day:

In today's digitalized age, technologies are evolving unprecedentedly, and teaching and learning are becoming more challenging, especially at the university level. To thrive in this rapidly changing world, universities must be innovative and responsive to the demands of teachers, students, and the workforce by updating necessary skills.

In Higher Education, a range of diverse skills is required mainly: study skills, technical skills, performance skills, academic skills, language skills, well-being skills, e-skills, and 21st-century skills... These skills are complementary as they all contribute to the proficiency of teaching and the development of learning. Skills may differ from one setting to another, and from one person to another and can only be maintained if they are approached progressively through continuous practice. Considering many factors such as the syllabus, course contents, materials availability, teachers' training, and student engagement, university teachers will undoubtedly contribute to the sustainability of the university's role which is to move higher education from better to the best.

Our concern in this study day is to scrutinize different types of university teaching/learning skills, to spotlight the main conditions that lead to quality skills' teaching/learning and guarantee academic achievement. How different skills are taught/learned, understood, approached, correlated, and developed all together make the core of this scientific event.
