The Third Space: Sociolinguistics at the Crossroads of Disciplines

Language is everywhere. It lives at the intersection of culture, society, cognition, and power. Yet, traditional disciplinary boundaries often prevent us from exploring these rich intersections fully. Our experience teaching sociolinguistics to university teachers from diverse disciplines has revealed the remarkable ways language shapes and is shaped by multiple fields of inquiry. This realization has inspired us to create a space where researchers from various backgrounds can explore the rich intersections between sociolinguistics and their own research domains. We invite researchers, educators, and practitioners from all disciplines to join us in exploring:

- How sociolinguistics informs and enriches your field
- Interdisciplinary methodologies and collaborative research
- Language, power, and identity across professional contexts
- The role of language in shaping disciplinary knowledge
- Aspects of sociolinguistics as portrayed in your disciplines of research (multilingualism, code-switching, diglossia, etc.)

Whether you work in social sciences, human sciences, hard sciences, health sciences, or any other field, your perspective on the intersection with sociolinguistics is valuable.
